Ms. Notkin has been working on behalf of children and families for over 30 years, designing and managing an array of innovative public and private initiatives. She started out as a child-care teacher in 1976, and her interest in child welfare dates from the late 1970s, when she worked as a counselor in one of the nation’s first shelters for battered women in Madison, Wis. Today, Ms. Notkin is Associate Director at the Center for the Study of Social Policy (CSSP) and manages the organization’s work on systems reform.

Ms. Notkin holds a master’s degree in social work from the University of Wisconsin.
